|| EDITORIAL TRANQUILIZERS

waking up one morning and finding oneself dazzled by 'the city' is somewhat not to be expected. what if the gray, greedy, rude city that was usually pierced with raw fake normality had been swallowed by fog so thick that everything seemed almost breathable? in a way, this resembles the 'what you don't know can't hurt you' paradigm, but nevertheless one might find oneself enjoying the subtle change in atmosphere. and then again, that very night, under the crippled light of a subway station 'the city' finally manages to catch up to its former nature and proves relentless in its phobias towards subcultural chasms. but innocent stares save face when eyes remain fixed on chains, a look one dares not decipher. there are temptations, strings that pull around our minds, paths that seem to never stray, but if one must detach itself, foggy mornings are recommended, of course with coffee.

as the world around is always new and always old, there is a number of ways to express it in order for the human mind to grasp its peculiarities. 'the spheres :: virtual art gallery' deals with the visual, but that's not all there is to it. feeding the mind is our top priority. trying to reach beyond the idea of a classic art gallery, 'the spheres :: a world behind curtains' opens its virtual doors and lets one see inside, as the eye perceives, the mind follows in understanding.

to that extent, let us introduce you to a different view of the world. imagine that everything and everyone is at hand's reach from you. that is the n-sphere. essentially, this object defines all that reaches out from a person's mind and forms their own personal universe, with or without the fog. so, enjoy n-sphere, our gallery's newsletter.
